Monday's Elections

Maine Democratic for First Time
Since 1880—Plaised (Dem.)
Governor by Safe Majority

Returns from the elections in Maine, Arizona and Arkansas show sweeping democratic victories. Besides electing the governor and three congressmen the democrats think they have carried the Maine legislature and will elect a successor to Senator Hale.

Col. Plaisted, the governor elect, is a son of the last democratic governor, elected by a smaller majority in 1880.

Arizona is easily democratic—guaranteeing a safe and sane constitution for that state.

In Arkansas the democratic majority is heavy.

A Trip to Southeast Missouri

In the first place, we had to start on Tuesday, because we had just so much money to spend. We live way over yonder, in the Sucker state, near a little old railroad about like the Iron Mountain. He carries the mail—works for Uncle Sam—and pulls down a good, fat salary, you know.

We drive twelve miles to take the train, so we can get there the same week. We get along all right till we get to the great city of St. Louis, where we were told we could not get to Lutesville, on account of a washout down the road.

After a wait of two and a half hours we were put on a train and dumped at Bismarck with the information that a wait of two or three days would be handed us.

We were crowding toward the warpath when told that by the way of Poplar Bluff we could get to Bollinger county. After leaving Poplar Bluff we passed through a beautiful country and arrived at Lutesville, forty-eight hours late.

MORE business is what we are after. We are not satisfied to drag along in the same old rut day after day, and be content with what trade may happen to come our way. We guarantee the goods. We want you to come and see the BARGAINS we have to offer.

and nearly starved. But the people on Crooked creek know how to entertain, and we were soon feasting on fruit, fish and other good things.

And afterward we had the time of our lives at the Leopold picnic. But only those who attend can realize what a splendid day those good people provide for their guests.

We were in Bollinger county over two weeks and enjoyed every minute of the time. Anyone who has a good farm there that he wants to trade for city property in a prosperous place like Fisher will please let me know. C. A. CUDWORTH.

Obituary

Robert Ester, son of J. M. and Mary Sitzes, was born Dec. 9, 1886, died of typhoid fever Sept. 6, 1910; aged 23 years, 8 months and 25 days.

He leaves a father, mother, four brothers and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

Early in life he professed faith in Christ and united with the Methodist church.

Ester was taken sick at Sikeston about two weeks before his death, and the care of a tender father and loving mother could not keep him with us, because God said, "It is enough."

He bore his suffering with patience to the end, and told his mother that he was ready to go if it were the Lord's will.

The home was lightened and made happy by his cheerfulness. He always had a kind word for everyone.

It seems hard for us to give Ester up in his youth, but we know not God's plans. This, only, adds one link more to the golden chain.

Dear father, mother and brothers weep not as they who have no hope, but strive to meet on that celestial shore, and may God forbid that the family chain be broken there.

These bereavements must come to all, but don't falter, dear ones; Christ is holding out His arms of love and mercy to comfort and sustain us. Let us draw near to Him and He will guide us to where parting is no more.

Lutesville News.

Walter Dickey and Willie Sample are spending a few days in St. Louis.

Mrs. J. L. Estes went to St. Louis Saturday to visit her sister a few days.

Otto Munch of near Tallent was in town this week, attending court at Marble Hill.

Oscar Lutes of Piedmont was here a few days the first of the week attending court.

R. E. Lee and family of near New Madrid are visiting the family of Dr. R. W. VanAmburg.

Waldo Lutes of Moberly was here the first of the week visiting his father, Squire Eli Lutes.

H. A. Clark and family, who have been spending the summer months in Massachusetts, returned home Monday.

The population of Lutesville is increasing rapidly, judging by the number of children we see on their way to school these mornings. All the houses in town are occupied and a number of other families are on the hunt for residences. People are beginning to realize that this is a good place to live. Here they have a good school, good churches, an abundance of living water—several wells in town ranging from 75 to 125 feet deep—plenty to eat, and, best of all, they enjoy good health. Omer Lutes bought and loaded two cars of apples last Friday and Saturday and took them to the St. Louis market. W. L. and Henry Lutes accompanied him to the city, returning Tuesday. This is the third full car of apples that has been shipped from here during the last few days besides the many hundreds of bushels that have been shipped by local freight and express. The fruit that has been shipped from this place this season has brought hundreds of dollars to the growers.

The Farmington fair will be held September 21-24 and promises to be great in every department. The association has spent several thousand dollars improving the grounds and we understand they are in fine shape.

Crops Saved by Fog

In order to prevent the frosts from destroying the fruit crops, a good many farmers are now making use of a fog generator, which so affects the temperature of the orchard that the frost does no harm.

The device consists of a sheet iron wagon, carrying an iron tank, which contains straw, which is continually kept wet by a water sprinkler. On a frosty night a fire, usually of tar, is lighted in the wagon beneath the tank of water-sprinkled straw, which, heating the water in the straw, generates a large amount of steam, that escapes into the air above. The wagon is then hurried off into the orchard, and a parade is begun up and down the rows, the steam from one wagon protecting two rows of trees. The steam settles on the leaves, blossoms and branches, dispelling the imminent frost, which can settle only on a clear, crisp and especially dry night.

Such methods as the above are now said to be generally in use in Southern California and in many of our other southern and western states. Often only fires are built in the orchard, which, by their combustion, supply the needed heat and moisture, but the fog generator is generally conceded the better of the two.—The Pathfinder.

A Self-Confessed Malefactor of Great Wealth

The only malefactor of great wealth who frankly acknowledges the crime and confesses that he has malefacted is the subject of an out-of-the-ordinary story by Bruce Barton in HUMAN LIFE for September.

This confession wasn't made on the mourner's bench, by the way, or after the doctor had told the man of millions that he had but a few hours more to live. The time and place were even more unusual.

Here is a part of his confession, and his arraignment of other gilded malefactors: "You are robbers, too. The only difference between us is that I know I steal and you don't. I am going to lead a better life and you are not. I don't mean that I am going to quit stealing. I'm only half honest yet—but I'm going to use my swag—I might as well be plain about it, and 'swag' is what it is—I'm going to use it to break up the system which has made it possible for me to get it. John D. Rockefeller is a member of my gang, a good, quiet little member, who doesn't have any idea how big a robber he is. Pierpont Morgan is another. The only trouble with them is their consciences need sandpapering, or they need a few more jolts in the stock market, or something of that kind to bring them to a sense of their iniquity. By the time that I am through with my crusade they will be ashamed of themselves. I intend to destroy the conditions that produce us robbers—us millionaires."

This is no fairy tale, but a perfectly true happening, and the life story of how this man made his millions, what has pricked his conscience, and his plan for destroying the system that makes such robbery of the public possible is one of the most unique features of this issue.—HUMAN LIFE PUBLISHING CO., Boston.
